Organized by

Dept. of ORTHOPAEDICS

INTRODUCTION

Thoracolumbar spine fractures are common injuries that can result in significant disability, deformity and neurological deficit.

Controversies exist regarding the appropriate radiological investigations, the indications for surgical management and the timing, approach and type of surgery.

This CME provides an overview of the recent updates in epidemiology, biomechanical principles, radiological and clinical evaluation, classification and management principles.

Treatment includes both nonoperative and operative methods and selected based on the degree of bony injury, neurological involvement, presence of associated injuries.
