ON THE EVE OF

WORLD PRE-ECLAMPSIA DAY

Hypertensive disorders of pregnancy constitute a leading cause of maternal and perinatal mortality worldwide. Preeclampsia, with or without severe features, is a disorder of pregnancy associated with new-onset hypertension, usually with accompanying proteinuria, which occurs most often after 20 weeks of gestation and frequently near term.

It encompasses 2% to 8% of pregnancy-related complications, more than 50,000 maternal deaths, and over 500,000 fetal deaths worldwide. Early diagnosis and prompt management are essential to preventing maternal and neonatal complications through symptomatic management and delivery planning.

With our hospital being the tertiary care centre, we cater to a lot of rural areas in and around Kolar district. Reference in view of pre-eclampsia occurs on a daily basis. Hence is the need of this lecture and panel discussion to increase our knowledge about hypertensive disorders of pregnancy and to discuss various clinical aspects and practical issues we face in the daily practice.
