Interventional radiology (IR) refers to a range of minimally invasive therapeutic techniques performed under image guidance. Interventional radiology offers a variety of both vascular and non-vascular procedures to complement many aspects of the modern practice of obstetrics and gynaecology.

Uterine artery embolisation (UAE) for fibroids describes the injection of a permanent occlusive agent into the uterine arteries to cause ischaemia of fibroids.

PPH remains a leading cause of maternal death. Several studies have shown that arterial balloon occlusion and embolisation reduces blood loss, and decreases the rates of both blood transfusion and hysterectomy.

With regard to obstetrics and gynaecology, IR can offer some safe and efficacious techniques as stand-alone alternatives or adjunct procedures. Longterm data is lacking in some areas, but IR is proving a fruitful area for enhancing patient care.

Radiology and Obstetrics & Gynaecology go hand in hand in clinical practice. There is much need to have integrated teaching programmes to enhance the knowledge of the obstetricians and the radiologists to work in coordination .
